

Once there was a cat who could talk. He wore gloves, a scarf and boots. His master was a young boy. The cat was named, Puss, Puss in Boots.

Puss was very smart. He caught a rabbit in a bag

Puss gave the rabbit to the king and said it was from his master, the prince. The king liked the rabbit and told Puss to thank his master.

Puss brought the king more rabbits saying this is from my master, the prince. The king was very happy and curious about the prince.

Puss knew the king was coming to a lake. Puss told the boy to take off his clothes and go into the lake. He had a plan.

The boy was in the water and the king arrived. Puss cried "Help, help"!

The king's men rescued the boy. The king gave him new clothes.

Puss ran to fields owned by an evil wizard. The wizard forced peasants to work the fields.

Puss told the peasants "Please tell the king my master, the prince, owns these fields and I will kill the evil wizard. You will be free". The peasants agree to help.

The king soon arrived. He asked "Who owns these fields"? A peasant said "The prince".
The boy was shocked.

Puss went to see the evil wizard. He flattered the wizard saying "You are the most powerful wizard in the land. Can you become something big like a lion"? "Easily" said the wizard

And the wizard became a lion

"Can you become something small like a mouse"? asked Puss. "Of course" bragged the wizard.

And the wizard became a mouse.

Puss grabbed the mouse and swallowed him. The peasants were free.

Soon the king the prince and the king's daughter, the princess arrived. Puss said "Welcome to the castle of my prince". Again the boy was shocked.

The king offered his daughter to the prince for marriage.

The prince and princess were married and lived happily ever after.

Puss and the king became best friends.
